

⑨

①

P. 127

Pursuing, as it does, the line of thought which is discovery and not conclusion, the mind which has itself in mind as it thinks, is always the better for its thinking. Whereas most ^{minds} ~~most~~, though they go from event to event, are not, in the end, uplifted by the vast extent of territory they have covered. And though they may be extremely intellectual about their experiences, they are not the clearer for having had them.